Trading With John Since digital currency is nothing a lot of than intangible data it is a lot of prone to fraud than physical currency in that it's possible to duplicate a unit of currency thereby causing inflation or altering the price of a transaction after it's been made for personal gain. To guarantee this does not happen the blockchain is 'policed' by volunteers or 'miners' who check the validity of each transaction that is created whereby with the aid of specialist hardware and software they ensure that information has not been tampered with.

Trading With John This is an automatic method for miner's software albeit an extremely time consuming one that involves a ton of processing power from their computer. To reward a miner for verifying a transaction the blockchain releases a replacement unit of digital currency and rewards them with it as an incentive to keep maintaining the network, therefore is digital currency created.
